

Diego Rimoch is a VP of at Kaplan, the education company, which became a 100% remote company 2 years ago.

He is Mexican and grew up between Paris and Mexico City in true Lauder fashion.

He has had a diverse career, first as an entrepreneur; he started a cinema company called Living Room Theaters with actual movie theaters that still exist and are located in Portland, Oregon, and Boca Raton Florida. He also started a company called Proludio, which developed a digital platform for the theatrical playback of movies.

After 9 years as an entrepreneur, he attended Wharton/Lauder in the Global track. He then joined McKinsey as a management consultant. After a couple of years, he joined Comcast, working in the "Video" strategy team. That's industry jargon for the business unit that manages cable TV subscriptions.

He still lives in Philadelphia with his wife and 2 daughters but is moving back to Mexico City over the coming Summer.
